You scuffed my not-a-boy.

I'll let it slide this time, but if it happens too often I'm going to start charging attrition.

Current Mood: devious

One hopes this was rock-climbing related scuffage.

I never saw the point of climbing cliffs unless there was a bear trying to eat you.

It's good practice for when there really is a bear trying to eat you, perhaps?

I might even let you borrow it sometimes. That is, if I were to happen to have one.

I do not deny that scuffling occurred.* I disavow all direct responsibility for the scuffling itself, however, though I did initiate actions which led indirectly or otherwise to the scuffling.

Yes, I'm practicing for official inquiries. You never know.

*Scuffling was incurred in the achievement of fun. Does that reduce my sentence?

Also, aren't you a little old to be doing that on jungle gyms?

Um, well, not fault, really. Just, you know, zeitgeist. Steam-engine time.

Maybe a little bit?

And I really, really want to be able to do that through-the-transom thing.

Given our day job, really effective getting-the-hell-out skills seem so useful.

Just remember that real glass does not break like movie glass.

And remember Dad's arm after the Stained Glass Window Incident.

You know, if you get back up to where you were doing the horizontal pullups on the practice board, the transom thing isn't far behind. But if you sever your femoral artery, just remember where my hands are gonna be.

Sir Humphrey Appleby wants you to know that he is deeply impressed by these two sentences. Though he still thinks you shouldn't have admitted to anything.
